Dear Auburn Fans and Guests:

Welcome to another exciting Auburn football game.

The 1975 season has a very special meaning to all of us at Auburn. Coach Jordan will retire after 25 years—a quarter of a century—as head football coach.

His record on the football field is well known. It is one of the nation's best. His contributions off the field are just as outstanding. The influence of this gentleman on the lives of young men and women in his 47 year association with intercollegiate athletics is immeasurable.

As one of his former players and coaches, I join you in saluting him as he joins me in welcoming you to today's game.

Lee R. Hayley
Athletic Director

Ralph "Shug" Jordan

When you think about it, it's really fitting and proper that Ralph Jordan should retire in America's Bi-centennial year.

His career, spanning one-fourth of the country's life, is in the finest tradition of the American Dream. It is analagous to that dream, and it is proof that the traditional American values of hard work, dedication, and sacrifice really do, in the end, succeed.

Living legends are not born. They are made. There were no silver spoons in Selma, Alabama when Ralph Jordan was born in 1910. When he graduated from Selma High School in 1927, the Great Depression was near. There was no money for college, so Ralph Jordan went to work with the highway department.

A year later, armed with the money he had made and the promise of a job hopping tables at a boarding house, Ralph Jordan entered Auburn. There was no indication that this 18-year-old freshman would one day be the third winningest active football coach in the nation and become the first active coach to have a stadium named for him. His parents helped when they could, but mostly young Ralph Jordan worked his way through college. "I'm very proud of that," he said recently, without a moment's hesitation. At one time he was three semesters behind in his tuition, but he worked on, and he made it.

Now, 47 years later, on the threshold of retirement, Ralph Jordan can look back on one of America's outstanding athletic careers — 172 victories, national and SEC championships, 22 All-Americans, 64 All-Conference performers, Heisman, Outland, and Jacobs award winners and 12 bowl games — and history is still being made.

For a while — a very short while — it appeared as if the legend would be complete at the conclusion of this season.

"I want to sit down around the 10-yard line and eat peanuts with my wife," he quipped the day he announced his retirement.

He should have known it would not be that easy.

Two months later he accepted Gov. George C. Wallace's appointment to the Auburn Board of Trustees. The appointment was made by the Governor, but the call for further service came from Auburn alumni, students, and friends across the nation. They knew he would carry to the Board of Trustees the same character and dedication that molded one of the nation's best athletic records.

So the Legend will go on. That's good, good for Ralph Jordan, good for Auburn, and good for the American Dream.

The Jordan Era

The Jordan Era began in 1951. Auburn had won only three games in the previous three years. During the next 25 years—the Jordan Era—Auburn became a national football power, one of the most colorful names in intercollegiate athletics, and Ralph Jordan became a legend in his own time. Here, for the record, is "The Jordan Era," an era that has, so far, produced 12 bowl teams, 22 All-Americans, 64 All-Conference performers, a national championship, and the best years in Auburn football history.

To those 10 other men

Since they started making up All-American teams in 1889, College Football in Alabama has contributed over 75 players to these teams. That's quite a record!

However, everybody can't make All-American. To those who did, remember: It took ten other young men to help you. The dedication and efforts of those other 10 men have made intercollegiate football what it is today. Thank you!

AUBURN UNIVERSITY

Football and women came to Auburn in 1892, and, as Dean of Women Katharine Cater says, Auburn men have been pursuing both with varying degrees of success ever since.

Co-education was inaugurated in the South in 1892 when Auburn first admitted women students. Likewise, the Auburn football team, coached by Dr. George Petrie, played the University of Georgia in the Deep South's first football game.

Founded in 1856 by the Methodist Church as East Alabama Male College, and named Alabama Polytechnic Institute in 1899, Auburn has been called a liberal arts college, a technical college, a technological college, a college of industrial science, a college of applied science, and more recently a university of applied science. It has always been described as a liberal college, with addition of wider offerings in the arts and the sciences and of more liberal arts curricula, the institution developed into a university in every sense of the word. From the first, the name of the City, drawn from Goldsmith's line, "Auburn, loveliest village of the plain," has been used to designate the institution. In recognition of these facts, the Legislature, as of January 1, 1960, changed the name of the institution to Auburn University.

Today Auburn University is one of the largest institutions in the South. From its 1859 enrollment of 80, Auburn's students today number almost 15,705. Growthwise, the original plant consisting of a single building and 16 acres has expanded into a multi-million dollar plant comprising 60 main buildings and 1,871 acres at the main campus. Total acreage over the state devoted to the Agricultural Experiment Station amounts to over 16,000 acres.

As a land-grant institution, Auburn, through its programs of instruction, agricultural and engineering experiment station research, and the Alabama Extension Service, touches the lives of practically all Alabamians.

The City of Auburn was incorporated in 1838 in Lee County, Alabama. It sits astride the junction of the Piedmont plateau and the Coastal plain. Temperatures are moderate, and the elevation is 732 feet. With an area of about 20 square miles, Auburn has a population of approximately 25,000.

Auburn is 60 miles east of Montgomery, 120 miles southeast of Birmingham, and 125 miles southwest of Atlanta, Georgia. It is served by a system of good highways and the Western Railway of Alabama.

The Past Decade— Unmatched Growth

The decade during which Dr. Harry M. Philpott has been president of Auburn University has been one of unmatched growth.

Enrollment on the main campus has increased from approximately 12,000 in 1965, when Dr. Philpott came from Florida as Auburn University's 11th president, to more than 16,400 students this fall. Several new buildings have been constructed to serve the growing student body. An urban campus, Auburn University at Montgomery, accepted its first students in 1971 and now has an enrollment of more than 3,500.

Auburn has awarded its 50,000th and 75,000th degrees in the past 10 years, with Dr. Philpott conferring 30,953 degrees on Auburn graduates. At the same time the University's annual budget has increased from $35 million to $90 million; more than $40 million has gone into new construction; and the University's endowment has risen from $3 million to more than $20 million.

Dr. Philpott's influence as an educational leader has been widespread. He has been an important spokesman at the state, regional and national levels, and he has been a member of numerous educational organizations and committees.

Soon after coming to Auburn from the vice presidency of the University of Florida, Dr. Philpott served as chairman of the Alabama Educational Study Commission, helping develop a 10-year plan for Alabama education. From this study emerged the Alabama Commission on Higher Education.

As chairman of the Southern Regional Education Board's Commission on Regional Cooperation, and later as vice chairman of SREB, Dr. Philpott helped establish an academic common market, allowing participating institutions to exchange students at the graduate level.

Dr. Philpott recently served as chairman of the Council of College Presidents of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges. Currently, he serves on the executive committee of NASULGC. He has also served a term as president of the Southeastern Conference.

At present Dr. Philpott is a member of the Supreme Court Advisory Committee on Judicial Ethics.

In his inaugural address as President, Dr. Philpott made a statement of vision and commitment that still rings true: "The quality of our educational program has more than kept pace with other advances. We have not arrived, for our aspirations are much higher than our achievements, but it should be known to all that Auburn is on the move."

Time, Energy and Talent— Elements of Progress

The teamwork of the Board of Trustees and President Philpott has resulted in contributions which have meant a great deal to Auburn's past decade of development.

Serving as a Board member of the state's largest university is a time-consuming task, requiring a high degree of dedication and commitment to education.

The past year has brought significant change in the Board's makeup, including the appointment of Sue Fincher as the first woman Board member. Auburn head football coach Ralph "Shug" Jordan will also sit on the Board following completion of this football season—his 25th at Auburn.

The members of the Board of Trustees are appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the state Senate. Two members are selected from the congressional district which includes Auburn, and one is chosen from each of the remaining districts as they were constituted in 1961. The Governor of Alabama and the State Superintendent of Education are also members of the Board by virtue of their positions. In addition, two students—Bert Young, president of the Student Government Association at the main campus, and Debi Bell, SGA president at the Montgomery campus—serve as ex-officio members of the Board.

MUTUAL SAVINGS Life INSURANCE COMPANY

Since 1927

HOME OFFICE: Decatur, Alabama

It is always easy to write the first GAME TODAY each season. There are countless changes from one season to another that are usually interesting. Rules changes usually justify a full column. However, if one tried to recount all the rules changes that were voted in when the NCAA had its emergency economy meeting August 14-15 in Chicago it would take this entire program.

The rule change that allowed "visiting" teams to "travel" with only 48 players while the "home" team could "dress out 60" caused the most national attention. In fact, it caused Auburn and Alabama to enter a suit in Federal Court that resulted in a restraining order allowing all teams to dress out 60 players.

The 48-60 rule was just one of many that will be studied more closely by the time the NCAA has its regular meeting in January. At press time it was still not known whether or not the NCAA would appeal the ruling.

So much for rules changes. Right now, the biggest concern facing the opening of football season here concerns the operation of the press box elevator. THE WHAT. Yes, Auburn has an elevator to the press box. The only thing it does not have is an operator.

When Coach Jordan announced his retirement just before spring training started it was a highly emotional time for everyone associated with the Athletic Department, as well as all Auburn alumni and fans. Everyone really dedicated all their efforts since then to making this final season a pleasant one for Coach Jordan.

Every detail was put on a checklist and handled in businesslike style. That is, all but one detail.

While Milton Thurston was taking months to get the Jordan-Hare turf that was badly torn up in the spring in perfect shape for today's game, and the coaches burned the midnight oil, and the players sacrificed through the winter, spring and summer to come back in top physical shape, all I had to do was find an elevator operator.

For most of the summer the question was not one of finding an operator, but whether or not the elevator would be finished in time for the first game. The elevator made it, but all of the press box improvements were not completed, and, as usual, the first game will be marked by a lot of unpredictable occurrences, like an undiscovered wasp nest in the men's room.

Meanwhile the players reported for fall practice. All Auburndom was expecting a 12-0 year and a national championship, even though the schedule demanded six tough road encounters.

Players went through the hottest two weeks of two-a-day practices in many years and never asked any quarter. Coaches resigned themselves to playing the majority of the season with 48 players. Suddenly, the restraining order changed the limit to 60 and the staff changed plans again.

The elevator was finished and countless meetings took place to iron out all the details for the start of yet another season. Every item was taken care of, save one.

It would be easy to hire an elevator operator. All it would take would be to find a person with a pleasant personality to work five straight hours without ever leaving the controls. A person who could use a little extra money. A person who could remember names and faces, especially coaches hurrying back from the dressing rooms to the phone booths after halftime. A person who could stay in a 6'x8' enclosure and not watch the game.

There are always volunteers who want to work "in the press box."

But nobody in Auburn wants to miss one minute of Coach Jordan's last season, much less spend it in an elevator, and I can't blame them.

Steve Stanaland

In His Spare Time...

By DAVID HOUSEL

A man can't play football all the time, not even if he is 6-3 and weighs 253 pounds. There has to be some time off, some time to himself, no matter how good a man is. Steve Stanaland, Auburn's starting defensive tackle is no exception.

When Stanaland is relaxing away from football he likes to fish, hunt and share his faith.

His love for fishing began when he was three years old. His grandparents took him to a small pond near their home. He caught a fish his first time out and big Steve's been hooked ever since.

Now he likes to go on two, three, sometimes four day bass fishing trips in Florida. Stanaland likes to fish at night. "Too hot to fish during the day," he says, so he and two or three friends will wet their hooks about 7 p.m., fish until 8 o'clock the next morning, then turn in for the day.

On the average two day trip, they usually catch about 125 pounds of bass, including several eight, nine and 10 pounders. While on these trips Steve likes to practice one of his other arts — cooking.

He won't say much about it — what 6-3, 253 pound man would? — but he will admit he whips up a pretty good barbecued chicken. He's good at fish and fried chicken too, but his specialty is fried sweet potatoes.

"Not many people around here have heard of fried sweet potatoes," he says, "but they are kind of like regular french fries."

Nope, ladies, he's not giving out any recipes.

Steve doesn't have much time to duck hunt now. Football takes most of his time now, but he likes to go when he can. He just likes to get out and walk through the woods and fields. Brings him close to nature and the Creator, he says.

And Big Steve knows the Creator quite well. He's one of Auburn's most active members of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

IN HIS SPARE TIME, Big Steve Stanaland likes to cook, hunt, and share his faith. He is a good cook too.

"I look back over my life," he says, "and I see a purpose and a plan for it all."

Part of that plan, he hopes, is a good year for Steve Stanaland and for Auburn.

He believes that a good year will show hundreds, and thousands of people what a person can accomplish if he uses his God-given talents to the best of his abilities. He believes too, that it will be an example of what a group of men can do when they love and respect one another as an individual and as teammates.

A lot of Auburn people want Stanaland's hope and prayer for the year to come to pass.

That would give him a lot of pleasant memories when he goes back to the little pond where his grandparents first took him fishing 18 years ago.

He owns part of it now.

His grandparents gave him their share of it.

FOOTBALL ILLUSTRATED

Terribly Delicate Art

By DAVID HOUSEL

Little things can be awfully important when kicking a football.

Little things like which side the laces are turned toward. That can make a difference in whether or not a 52 yard field goal is good or no good.

But big things can be important. Take 48 pounds off a man, for example, and that man won't be able to kick a football 52 yards. He may get to the ball quicker and follow through better, but the distance won't be there.

These are two of the intricate discoveries Greg Gillis and Chris Wilson have made as they practice the delicate art of kicking a football through two metal bars, 10' high and 23'4" wide, from distances ranging from 17 yards to 62 yards away.

Gillis, for example, finds the lace location very important. If they are turned to one side or the other, odds are that Gillis will kick it that way. He doesn't really know why — unless it breaks his concentration — but it usually happens that way.

Gillis compares place kicking to playing golf. Hitting the ball down the fairway and putting a football through the goal post have a lot in common.

"In both cases," says Gillis, who plays golf in the high 80's, "you have to keep your head down and go straight through the ball. Going straight through is very important. If there is any distraction, no matter how slight, to the left or the right, there is a tremendous tendency to kick the ball that way."

Losing 48 pounds has affected Wilson's kicking game. At one time he weighed 223 pounds. Now he's down to 175. His secret to success is very simple. Just eat one meal a day in Sewell Dining Hall.

"Coach Davis wanted me to lose some," said Chris, "and after I got started, I just kept taking it off until I got in good shape."

It has cost him some power and distance. "I'm more accurate now," he says, "because I get to the ball quicker, but my maximum range is down to 42 yards." It used to be in excess of 50 yards.

Gillis has had the same experience, and for a similar reason. Coach Davis told him to gain weight. He needed it when he went down on kickoffs and tried to tackle much bigger men. Gillis began eating at Sewell and went from 155 to 180. It added five or six yards to his distance. Now that he is married and not eating at Sewell as much, he has lost 12 pounds and with it, he has lost some of his distance.

If Gillis and Wilson were going to lose distance, they could not have picked a better time to lose it.

GILLIS AND WILSON discuss the fine art of kicking a football.

Neil O'Donoghue is expected to have Auburn's long range kicking game under control.

While he has not kicked in a game, O'Donoghue — called Irish by his teammates — believes his biggest adjustment will be relating to his specialty role. Instead of being involved in the game, O'Donoghue will go in for one play, do his job, and come out again.

Kicking under pressure will be different too. The transfer from St. Bernard in Cullman has not kicked a football with 11 angry men rushing him. Gillis and Wilson have some tips on how to handle that.

"You can't think about them," said Wilson. "You just have to do your job and pretend they aren't there. If you do your job, they won't have a chance to block the kicks."

Chris blocks them out by concentrating on the goal post and the ball. "I swing my arms to get my line right," he says, "then I follow the ball from the center's hands to the holder. I start my motion as soon as it touches the holder's hands. I try to keep my foot locked and keep my heel going straight through the ball and the goal posts."

"We feel the linemen coming," says Wilson. "We have to, but we never know where they are. We just hear a lot of pads popping."

Gillis asks himself three questions: "What's the center going to do? What's the holder going to do? Where's the ball going to be?"

By the time the answers are answered, the ball is on the way, and he waits for the roar of an approving crowd.

No kicker ever goes into a game expecting to miss.

Butler & Gilligan

It's What's Inside That Counts...

By MEL PULLIAM

Ed Butler says a prayer every time he leaves the huddle.

Jeff Gilligan, his teammate, just prays that he will have the opportunity to get in the huddle.

When Butler, a tight end, heads for the line of scrimmage, he asks for help in catching a pass, making a block or running a pass route.

Sometimes he catches a pass, sometimes he doesn't.

Regardless of the outcome, Ed doesn't measure the success of his prayers in terms of passes caught or blocks made. If he did, he wouldn't have much to measure.

"I can remember every pass I've caught at Auburn," Ed says. "What year, what game and what part of the field."

The senior from Atlanta remembers his first varsity catch, as a freshman against Mississippi State. ("It was the first and last one all year.")

He can tell you about the seven passes he caught as a sophomore. He knows that three of the four receptions he made last season went for touchdowns and came off the same play.

Gilligan can match Butler's memory. A junior college transfer, Jeff has been around three seasons, but has only six receptions and one 55-yard punt to remember. Going into the 1975 season, Gilligan figured things would get better. The senior from Peru, Ill., was listed as Auburn's starting split end and back-up punter to Clyde Baumgartner.

Butler and Gilligan, however, don't measure success on the football field in statistics. They evaluate their true success by how they feel inside.

That feeling, to Ed Butler and Jeff Gilligan, is more reassuring than any statistic in the Sunday morning sports page.

It is the same feeling, explains Ed Butler, that he gets from painting. "I do a lot of artwork," he says. "Sometimes, I get halfway through and suddenly it seems all so worthless; there's really no reason for going on with it. But whenever I finish, there's a good feeling inside. I guess it's a feeling of accomplishment.

"It's the same way with football," Ed goes on. "Practicing every day, the long hours, the meetings get to you sometimes. But when you catch a pass or win a game, there's a good feeling afterward, that same feeling of accomplishment."

For Jeff Gilligan, the key word is "satisfaction." "That's probably the best part of catching a pass," he says, "especially a touchdown pass. The satisfaction comes because you know that all the hard work has paid off, that you've done the part you're supposed to do that will help the team the most."

Unfortunately, Gilligan will have to live that feeling of satisfaction vicariously through Ed Butler, or someone else, for awhile. A separated shoulder during a preseason scrimmage forced an operation and an eight-week layoff for Jeff.

He had another feeling — disappointment — right after the injury, but got over it quickly.

"Sure, I was disappointed when it happened, three years of work gone down the drain. But it happened. It was senseless to worry, so I accepted the fact I would be out."

"You gotta have patience."

According to Jeff, he's satisfied that that satisfying feeling might return by the Mississippi State game. Both he and Ed Butler are praying that it's so.

WITH DAVID HOUSEL

Here, There, and Yonder, easing into the 1975 season. . . .

You never know what experiences a man may carry with him. Take guard Arnaldo Abreu, for example. Sitting in the stadium or in the press box, you might guess that he is a Cuban refugee, but you would never guess what Arnaldo went through as a seven year old boy.

"It all begins with my parents," Arnaldo quips. "They were Cubans. . . ."

Then he gets serious. He remembers when his father, a doctor, carried a machine gun in his car. He had gone to school with Castro, but fought against him. His father was afraid that Fidel would send for him as he had so many others.

Arnaldo remembers the drama of their escape in 1961, all of the money it cost, the bribes it took to get the right people to sign the right paper and then, never knowing if they would tell. . . . Seeing a man being drug out of a restaurant, about to be shot is one of his last memories of Cuba.

"Who could have ever told me, back then," he says, "that one day I would be playing football for Auburn University?"

Phil Gargis had an interesting, almost tragic, summer. He worked as construction worker in Colbert County. He was laying pipe one day, digging on the side of a hill, when a cave-in almost buried him. Only his head and neck were out of the dirt.

He's modest about the whole thing now, facing Memphis State. "They got me out in about 10 minutes," he says. "Wasn't anything to it."

Try telling the Auburn coaching staff and football team that.

Coach Jordan became a grandfather again this summer, for the third time. James Ralph Jordan III was born to Mr. and Mrs. James Ralph Jordan II (Pee Wee and Eve) of Norris, Tenn. Pee Wee's with TVA there. Young Jordan was born in Knoxville. Coach Jordan is on record as saying that's the most pleasant thing to come out of Big Orange Country in some time.

Greg Gillis figures he saved the U.S. government

— you and me — about $35,000 by getting out of the Navy. Young Gillis, it seems, has a tendency to sleepwalk, especially after a scary movie. That didn't bother Navy recruiters too much when Gillis joined up, but it bothered them an awful lot when he was found sleepwalking on an aircraft carrier — one deck below his bunk. "They were afraid I might walk off the side of the ship," said Gillis, "and they'd have to pay me the rest of my life."

Don't say the Bible isn't relevant nowadays. Consider Rev. Charles Britt's scripture selection for tomorrow. If Auburn wins, those attending Auburn United Methodist Church, will hear Deuteronomy 2:33,36, "And the Lord gave him over to us and we defeated him and his sons. . . . In the city that is by the river there was not one too strong for us."

If Auburn loses, they will hear Hosea 9:6, "And Memphis shall bury them. . . ."

He expects to use the first one.

The way Auburn people are buying road game football tickets this fall has prompted one fan of another school not too far from where you're sitting to make an interesting comparison. "Auburn people are like sin and Santa Claus. They're everywhere."

Athletic Business Manager Bill Beckwith was a proud pappa this summer. His youngest son, Joe — Smokin' Joe, we call him — just plain tore up the Cape Cod (Mass.) summer baseball league. Joe pitched his team to the league championship, appearing in four of seven playoff games. Overall, he had a 1.61 ERA, giving up only 18 earned runs in 99 and one third innings. Yep, Smokin' Joe will be on the mound for the Tigers this spring.

Auburn is expecting 16,800 students this fall. That's still the largest on-campus enrollment in Alabama. Sorority rush started today. Fraternity rush starts Sept. 21. School starts Sept. 24. It's Auburn's 120th year of service.

Bet you a Tennessee ticket this is the first Auburn story you've read all week that hasn't made reference to this being Coach Jordan's last year.

If you don't know it by now, you ought not to be here.

"Down Through The Years..."

The legend of Shug Jordan and his contributions to Auburn will grow and grow...

Honor that legend by hanging a full-color plaque of Coach Jordan in your home or office. Each plaque is hand-polished and made of indestructible wood-style material. Excellent for den, study, children's room or office.

Available for only $10.95 in the stadium, in better stores throughout Alabama, West Georgia, and other areas, or by the order form below. A biographical summary of Coach Jordan's career, suitable for framing, will accompany each order.

AUBURN UNIVERSITY

Auburn Television Enters Third Decade of Service

When Auburn University's Educational Television center celebrates its 20th anniversary next month, it will be a colorful event indeed.

A $453,750 equipment grant from HEW and matching funds from the University have made possible the purchase of state-of-the-art color production components.

ETV is now installing equipment that includes color cameras and videotape machines, and audio and video switching consoles in remodeled control rooms.

ETV director Ed Wegener hopes to have the new equipment in operation this fall with full color programs on the air in January.

Auburn's studios went on the air October 3, 1955, as the second production facility in the nation's first state public television network.

In the past 20 years the Auburn center has emphasized an approach to programming that serves the day-to-day needs of the public, whether it's how to fill out tax forms, feed and clothe a family properly, or grow a garden. The focus has been on finding out what the people need, and then concentrating on meeting those needs.

Auburn's studios have been active in covering public and cultural events, and specials such as the nationally broadcast documentary "Free State of Winston," which focused on the effect of industry on formerly rural Winston County.

Star Spangled Banner

O say can you see, by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming?
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, through the perilous fight,
O'er the ramparts we watched, were so gallantly streaming?
And the rocket's red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there.
O say does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

The Alma Mater

On the rolling plains of Dixie
'Neath its sun-kissed sky,
Proudly stands our Alma Mater
Banners high.

To thy name we'll sing thy praise,
From hearts that love so true,
And pledge to thee our Loyalty the ages through.

We hail thee, Auburn, and we vow
To work for thy just fame,
And hold in memory as we do now
Thy cherished name.

Auburn Basketball IS Back!

"Auburn basketball is bouncing back" has been a popular slogan around the Loveliest Village for two seasons. It's been changed this year—not much—but enough to be significant.

"Is bouncing" has given way to "has bounced."

An 18-8 overall record and a tie for third place in the SEC in 1975 indicates that Auburn's basketball team has bounced back into the big time in a big way.

Record crowds are another sign that Auburn basketball has arrived. The Tigers averaged over 8200 in attendance for 12 home games last year, almost 3000 more than the previous season.

DAVIS

Season ticket sales were at an all-time high, too, and the Auburn Athletic Department Ticket Office expects another record sale of season basketball books in 1976. The season book will contain tickets for 11 home games which include nine SEC opponents, along with Butler and Georgia Tech.

Coach Bob Davis has Auburn's basketball program going first class in other ways. Davis' team will challenge national powers like North Carolina State and Texas-El Paso in tournaments this year, as well as perennial SEC contenders Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama.

Five starters and 12 lettermen return from a team that last winter recorded Auburn's first winning season in basketball in five years. The starters are: Junior guard Eddie Johnson, of Weirsdale, Fla., an All-America candidate that is considered one of the best all-around players ever to compete in the SEC. Senior forward Gary Redding, of Atlanta, Ga., who has been among the SEC's top 10 rebounders three consecutive years and twice been named to the All-SEC Academic team. Sophomore forward Mike Mitchell, from Atlanta, Ga., who was one of the nation's best college freshmen last season. He has been selected as one of 16 athletes for the U.S. basketball team in the Pan American Games this fall.

Sophomore guard Stan Pietkiewicz, from Winter Park, Fla., and sophomore center Myles Patrick of Macon, Ga., round out the list of returning starters.

forward Pepto Bolden, senior forward Bob Bond and senior center Glen Moon are front-liners who should see a lot of action this winter. Other lettermen returning include junior forward David Cunningham, senior forward Dale Deschamps, and junior center Emmett Thomas.

JORDAN-HARE STADIUM

Jordan-Hare Stadium loses part of its uniqueness at the close of this football season.

It is currently the only college stadium in the country named for an active coach. When Ralph Jordan retires early in 1976, this claim will be gone, but the contributions of the two men — Jordan and Hare — will live on, perhaps forever.

JORDAN

Ralph Jordan is Auburn's most successful coach. Prior to his return in 1951, Auburn won three games in three years. In only three years, Jordan had his alma mater in a bowl again. His 1957 team won Auburn's first National Championship. Going into his final season, Jordan teams have won 172 games. A coach would have to win 12 games a year for 14 straight years just to approach Jordan's record. Following his retirement, Jordan will continue to serve the University as a member of the Board of Trustees.

Cliff Hare was a quarterback on Auburn's first football team, in 1892. He was later dean of chemistry, chairman of Auburn's athletic committee, and President of the Southern Conference. His philosophy on athletics is inscribed on the Cliff Hare Award, presented annually to Auburn's outstanding senior athlete: "Athletics makes men strong, Study makes men wise, and Character makes men great."

Originally known as Auburn Stadium, Jordan-Hare has grown from an original seating capacity of 7,200 in 1939 to 61,261 in 1975. Three of the stadium's five major enlargements came while Jordan was coach. More than 30,000 season tickets are sold annually and the largest crowd ever to see a game in Jordan-Hare is 64,748 for the Auburn-Georgia game Nov. 16, 1974. Auburn won 17-13.

Auburn Stadium was renamed Cliff Hare Stadium in 1949 and Jordan-Hare Stadium in 1973.

Things To Remember At Jordan-Hare

MEDICAL EMERGENCY

Should you need medical attention, notify the white-clad individual on the nearest concourse inside the stadium. Within three minutes, top flight medical aid, equivalent to hospital aid, will be at your side. DO NOT LEAVE YOUR SEAT. Contact the nearest white-clad medical staff member. Remain in your seat. That is the quickest way to receive medical aid.

LOST AND FOUND

Report lost articles to Milton Thurston at the athletic equipment office in Memorial Coliseum on Monday following the game. All articles found in the stadium should be turned in to the first aid room for collection by Mr. Thurston.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

State law prohibits the consumption of alcoholic beverages on the Auburn campus. Ice chests and coolers are not allowed in the stadium as they may be a nuisance to others.

TELEPHONES

Public telephones are located beneath the East and West Stands at approximately the 50 yard line, and under the middle of the South End Zone Stands. There are no public telephones in the North Stands.

RADIOS AND CAMERAS

Radios and Cameras are not allowed in the Stadium. Radios may interfere with transmission of Auburn broadcasts and often disturb fans in the immediate area. Cameras are not allowed because users may stand and block the view of others.

REST ROOMS

Restrooms for men and women are located on the concourse level beneath the North, South, East and West Stands.

PARKING

Convenient parking is available near Jordan-Hare Stadium. Follow the directions of the policemen and game parkers who will direct you to and from the nearest parking areas in the minimum amount of time possible.

The Auburn Athletic Department is eager to render the maximum service to the patrons of Jordan-Hare Stadium. This includes those in our ticket office, ushers, police, stadium guards, vendors and all other attendants on game days. We are grateful for the letters of appreciation received in recognition of the courtesies our staff tries to render.

Please drive carefully on the way home, and remember, Don't Be Fuelish!

HARE

AU: An Idea and One Million Bricks

From 80 students in 1859, Auburn University has grown to become Alabama's largest university with an enrollment this fall of almost 17,000 students. In a sense, although it is only 119 years old, Auburn has grown up with America. And as America celebrates its 200th birthday, editor Dru McGowen of the Department of University Relations traces the growth of Auburn in a series of five articles to appear in Auburn Football Illustrated.

By DRU MCGOWEN

Trees. Thousands of them. They may be the first things a visitor notices on the Auburn campus—with probably 15,000 visible from the top of Haley Center. Two-thirds of the 85 species are native to Alabama, and some of the gnarled old water oaks were here at the turn of the century. With new seedlings planted, suckers reaching adolescence and laurels spreading to fullness, one hardly notices when a pine falls to lightning. So it is with the change and growth and endurance of Auburn.

Most of the oaks and chestnuts and hickories were laid out by squirrels; the pines by cones; but the pin oaks which shade the streets and walkways were carefully planted. The things that go to make up Auburn have followed much the same pattern: some of them evolved naturally; some of them came from careful planning.

On the north lawn of the Ralph Brown Draughon Library is the stump of an ancient water oak from which twin offspring still live to offer shade. William Bartram, the Philadelphia naturalist commissioned 200 years ago to catalog the trees in the Southeast, may have rested beneath just such an oak.

Bartram wrote of the ball games of the Creek Indians, first inhabitants of the Auburn area, "which took place almost monthly, but particularly in late summer with the harvest of corn. . . . The inhabitants of one town play another. . . . Youth of both sexes are often engaged, and sometimes stake their whole substance. . . . They perform amazing feats of strength and agility . . . taking and carrying off the ball from the opposite party after it has been hurled into the air. . . . The foot ball is likewise a favorite, manly diversion. . . ."

Sixty years later, as the Creeks were being sent to Oklahoma Territory and after Alabama had become the 22nd state in the new union, a town grew up around the water oaks. It was 1836; Sam Colt had just patented his revolver, and the Auburn settlers had found their frontier.

Two academies were located in Auburn as Louis Pasteur conducted his studies in Paris, the McCormick reaper was invented, and Goodyear's vulcanizing process and Singer's sewing machine were patented. It was during this period of great activity that Auburn citizens, by private subscription, bought a million bricks and constructed a four-story building to provide their young men with a college. Chartered in 1856, classes at East Alabama Male College began in 1859, with a faculty of six and a student body of 80—mostly preparatory students.

Alabama Methodists later supported the school which was to become Auburn University, and in 1872 it was turned over to the state to become a land-grant institution. It was one of 72 such colleges designed to pioneer in the agricultural and technical fields, destined to achieve for the United States a future far surpassing the imagination of even the wildest dreamers who signed the Declaration of Independence.

There are almost 17,000 students on the main campus of Auburn today—two-thirds of them native to Alabama.

(This bicentennial report is continued in the Oct. 4 issue of Auburn Football Illustrated.)
